Directed by Steve Bendelack and written for the screen by Hamish McColl and Robin Driscoll (a writer in the TV series), from a story by Simon McBurney, is a British-American venture produced by StudioCanal, Working Title Films and Tiger Aspect Films, and distributed by Universal Pictures. The film stars Rowan Atkinson, starring Max Baldry, Emma de Caunes, Willem Dafoe and Karel Roden in supporting roles. Mr. Bean's Holiday was released theatrically in the United Kingdom on March 30, 2007 and in the United States on August 24, 2007, for mixed reviews from critics, but box office success, grossing $229.7 million worldwide, with a budget of $25 million. [4] Plot In a raffle, Mr. Bean wins a train holiday to Cannes, a video camera and 200 euros. Before catching his train, Bean causes chaos as he tastes French seafood in a Paris restaurant. On the platform of Gare de Lyon, Bean asks Russian director Emil Duchevesky to film him getting on the train with his new video camera. Bean continues to ask for replays until the train leaves with Bean and Duchevesky's son Stepan on the train, and Duchevesky is left behind. Bean and Stepan descend to the next station. When Duchevesky's train passes through the station without stopping, he holds a mobile phone number, but accidentally hides the last two digits. Attempts to call the number are futile. They boarded the next train, but Bean left his wallet, passport and ticket in the phone booth and are thrown off the train. Bean is a mime and buys bus tickets to Cannes. Bean manages to lose both his ticket and Stepan, so he starts and hitchhikes. The next morning, he wakes up in what appears to be a strange French village attacked by German soldiers. It turns out to be a film set for a yogurt commercial directed by Carson Clay (Willem Dafoe), and Bean becomes a plus in until accidentally destroys the set in an explosion while reloading its camera. Continuing to Bean is picked up by French actress Sabine on her way to the Cannes Film Festival, where her debut film is to be shown. At a gas station I find Stepan dancing with a band and i'm taking him with them. The trio gets to drive all night. Sabine sees on TV that Bean is suspected of Stepan's abduction. She doesn't go to the police because she doesn't want to be late for her movie premiere, which is in just an hour. To avoid detection, Sabine disguises Bean and Stepan as her mother and daughter to enter the premiere. At the festival, Bean and Sabine are shocked to see that Sabine's role has been cut from the film. He connects his camera to the projector and designs his video diary. The film aligns well with Clay's narrative, and the director, Sabine and Bean, receive a standing ovation. Stepan and Duchevesky finally reunited. After the screening, Bean goes to the beach, where he and the other characters mimic a great French musical finale. After credits Bean writes FIN in the sand with his foot as the camera battery dies, the movie ends. He cast Rowan Atkinson at a film premiere in March 2007. Rowan Atkinson as Mr. Bean Emma de Caunes as Sabine Max Baldry as Stepan Dachevsky Willem Dafoe as Carson Clay Karel Roden as Emil Dachevsky Jean Rochefort as Maître d'Hôtel Catherine Hosmalin as ticket inspector Urban Cancellor as bus driver Stéphane Debac as traffic controller Julie Ferrier as the first AD Steve Pemberton as Vicar Lily Atkinson as Lily Production This article needs additional quotes for verification. Find sources: Mr Bean's Holiday – news · newspapers · books · scholar · JSTOR (January 2020) (Learn and when to remove this template message) In February 2001, before filming began on Scooby-Doo, Rowan Atkinson was lured into making a second movie adaptation of Mr. Bean, involving Mr. Bean going on an Australian adventure under the title of Working Down Under Bean. [5] However, this idea was eliminated in favour of Mr Bean's celebration, which was particularly inspired by monsieur Hulot's Holiday (1953), whose main character inspired the character of Mr. Bean. The main photograph of the film began on 15 May 2006 under the working title French Bean. [citation required] In March 2005, the news in the film suggested that it would be written by Simon McBurney, but in December 2005, Atkinson said that the script was written by himself and his long-time collaborator and mr. Bean co-creator Richard Curtis. The script was later confirmed to have been written by Robin Driscoll (also a writer in the TV series) and Hamish McColl while the story was written by McBurney, who also as one of the executive producers of the film with Curtis. [citation required] Music The film was composed and directed by Howard Goodall, who also composed Mr. Bean series, though the original Mr. Bean theme was unused. It has a symphonic orchestration, which is a sophisticated score instead of the series's tendency to repeat simple musical rehearsals, and also presents captivating lees for certain characters or scenes. The theme of the film was Crash by Matt Willis. Release This was the official film for Red Nose Day 2007, with money from the film going towards the charity Comic Relief. Prior to the film's release, a new and exclusive mr. Bean sketch entitled Mr. Bean's Wedding was broadcast on the telethon for Comic Relief on BBC One on 16 March 2007. The film's official premiere took place on Sunday, March 25, at the Odeon Leicester Square and helped raise money for both Comic Relief and Oxford Children's Hospital. [citation required] Universal Pictures released a teaser trailer for the film in November 2006 and released an official online website the following month. Mr. Bean's Holiday Home Media was released on both DVD and HD DVD on November 27, 2007. The DVD release is in separate widescreen and pan and scan formats in the United States. The DVD was mapped to number 1 in the UK DVD chart during its release week. After the war in high definition optical disc format in 2006-2008, the film was released on Blu-ray in the UNITED Kingdom on 18 October 2010. The film was released on Blu-ray for the first time in the United States on April 16, 2019. [6] [7] [8] There are fifteen deleted scenes included in home press releases. The first deleted scene shows Bean spilling coffee on a laptop in front of two sleeping men; He cleans it by wiping the keyboard with napkins, leaving one of the two men wakes up and blames the other for destroying his laptop. This scene was featured on trailers and TV spots for the film, while the North American release takes it instead of the vending machine scene. The second deleted scene shows Bean tricking a man into taking a train ticket and sitting with Stepan on the train. The fourth shows Bean carrying Stepan through a market. The fifth shows Sabine leaving emotional lysing and almost being run over by a truck, Bean makes stupid moves along the way (which are later seen in Carson Clay's Playback Time in the final cut), playing with umbrellas in the morning, mimicking his trip to Stepan to the cafeteria, being threatened by a projectionist at the Cannes Film Festival (during Clay's film game) , accidentally cutting the film roll and trying to glue it back together and Carson Clay discover the movie roll accumulating in the projection room. The damaged film is seen lying next to the projector in the final cut, although it remains inexplicable. Finally, Bean is seen dancing on the beach, a scene that was replaced by the characters singing La Mer. Reception Box office Mr. Bean's Holiday opened in the United States on August 24, 2007, alongside War and The Nanny Diaries, and cashed dollars in his opening weekend while playing in 1,714 1,714 with an average of $5,770 per theater and 4th place at the box office. The film ended on October 18, 2007 with a final domestic gross of $33,302,167 and a final international gross of $196,434,177. Culminating with a global total of $229,736,344, the film became commercially successful given its $25 million budget. [4] The film was released in the United Kingdom on 30 March 2007 and reached number one at the county's box office for the next two weekends, before being dethroned by Wild Hogs. [9] [10] Critical response on Rotten Tomatoes, the film has an approval rating of 52% based on 113 reviews with an average rating of 5.45/10. The critical consensus of the site says, Mr. Bean's Holiday means good, but good intentions can't withstand the 90 minutes of monotonous and tired slapstick, obvious gags. [11] On Metacritic, the film has a score of 56 out of 100 based on 26 reviews, indicating mixed or average reviews. [12] The audiences interviewed by CinemaScore gave the film an average B rating on a scale from A+ to F. [13] BBC film critic Paul Arendt gave the film 3 out of 5 stars, saying it was hard to explain Mr. Bean's call. At first glance, he seems to be modeled from the primordial clay of nightmares: a human-child leering with a body as a tweed-covered tangle of pipe cleaning and gumming, the window-lins countence of a suburban sex offender. It's a testament to Rowan Atkinson's ability that, by the end of the film, he seems almost cuddly. [14] Philip French of The Observer referred to Mr. Bean's character as a lonely sub-Hulot and said that the plot involved Atkinson coming into contact with his retarded inner child. The French also said that the best joke is taken directly from Jour's Daddy's Girls. [15] Wendy Ide of The Times gave the film 2 out of 5 stars and said: It has long been a mystery to the British, who consider Bean, at best, a despicable secret weakness, that Rowan Atkinson's repulsive creation is absolutely massive on the continent. Ide said some parts of the film are reminiscent of City of God, The Straight Story, and said that two scenes are borrowed from Pee-wee's Big Adventure. Ide also wrote that the jokes are weak and a gag was passed for sale-date ten years ago. [16] Steve Rose of The Guardian gave the film 2 out of 5 stars, saying that the film was full of extremely weak gags, and in A post-Borat world, there is certainly no place for Bean's antiquated merger between Jacques Tati, Pee-Wee Herman and John Major?.[17] While Colm Andrew of the Marx Independent said that the fragility of the character, which is essentially a one-trick pony, begins to appear and its continuous close-up in the room becomes tiresome. Peter Rainer of The Christian Science Monitor gave the film a B and said: Since Mr. Bean rarely speaks a sentence the effect is to watch a silent movie with sound effects. It was also the dramatic trick of the great French director-performer Jacques Tati, who is clearly the great influence Amy Biancolli of the Houston Chronicle gave the film 3 out of 4 stars, saying: Don't confuse this simpleton hero, or the simplicity of her own film, for a lack of intelligence. Mr. Bean's Holiday is pretty savvy about filmmaking, landing a few strokes for satire. Biancolli said that humor is still elementalbritish and more than a French note. What it isn't, it wasn't, it shouldn't try to be, it's American. This is the mistake made by Mel Smith and the ill-advised forces behind Bean: The Movie from 1997. [19] Ty Burr of The Boston Globe wrote, Either you'll find [Atkinson] hilarious – or he'll look like one of those awful, boring comedians who just thinks it's hilarious. Burr also said that there are also a few gags stolen directly from Daddy, but concluded that Somewhere, Jacques Tati is smiling. [20] Tom Long of The Detroit News said, Watching 90 minutes of these things – we're talking broad, broad comedy here – may seem a bit much, but this movie actually picks up steam as it rolls along, becoming increasingly absurd, and also Mr. Bean provides a direct reformato reminder of the simple roots of comedy in these dark, too fabricated times. [21] Suzanne Condie Lambert of The Arizona Republic wrote: Atkinson is a physically talented comedian. And the film is a rarity: a child-friendly movie that was clearly not produced as a vehicle for selling toys and video games, but also said that it's hard to laugh at a character I'm 95 percent sure is autistic. [22] Lawrence Toppman of The Charlotte Observer gave the film 2 1/2 stars out of 4 and said: If you like [the character], you will surely like Mr. Bean's Vacation, a sequel 10 years later to Bean. I found it intermittently funny yet almost relentlessly creepy, and also Atkinson does not have the deadpan elegance of a Buster Keaton or the stinky, gentle physicality of a Jacques Tati (whose holiday Mr. Hulot inspired the title). He's the funniest when shameless robbery... [23] Ruthe Stein of the San Francisco Chronicle said that the disasters instigated by Bean's hapngness are quickly becoming tiring and predictable, but said that a later scene in the film is worth sticking around for. [24] Elizabeth Weitzman of the New York Daily News gave the film 2 out of 4 stars and said: If you were never particularly proud of Atkinson's slapstick brand, it certainly won't be converted by this trifle, and also, if the title sounds familiar, it is because Atkinson intends his film to be a homage to the 1953 French classic holiday, Mr. Hulot. Mr. Hulot was played by one of the physical comedians of all time, Jacques Tati, and the film is a real delight from start to finish. This version offers a few laughs and an admirable commitment to old-fashioned fun. [25] Phil from the Arizona Daily Star gave the film 2 stars and said: If you saw 10 minutes of Rowan Atkinson's Mr. Bean routine, you saw everything, and the Nazi Stuff is a little out of place in a G-rated movie. Claudia Puig of USA Today gave the film 1 1/2 stars out of 4 and said: If you have been lobotomized or have the mental age of a kindergarten, Mr. Bean's Holiday is viable for comic entertainment and also the film, set mostly in France, pays homage to Jacques Tati, but the mostly silent gags feel like watered-down Bean.
